Syrian officials have complained m UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan over the arrest by Israeli police of a Golan Heights Druse woman, suspected of harming the security of the state.

The woman, Alham Naif Abu Salah, a resident of Majdal Shams. was arrested earlier this week but details were oot revealed because of a publicity ban imposed by the Acre Magistrate's Court

The ban was partially lifted yesterday after the story appeared on Syrian television ou Monday along with a report of demonstrations by Majdal Shams residents protesting Abu Salah's arrest.

Syrian newspapers highlighted the story yesterday, saying the woman was a psychology student at Damascus University who had returned to her home in Majdal Shams two months ago for summer vacation.

According to the newspaper reports, the rector of the university, as well as Syrian officials sent a letter of protest to Annan. They charged that Abu Salah's arrest was part of what they described as the ongoing "barbaric oppression" by Israel of "Syrian students from the Golan."

The arrest of the 30 year-old student sent shock waves through the oght-knit Druse community on the Golan. Residents in Majdal Shams demonstrated in the village on Tuesday, burning tires at the village entrance and parading through the main street, waving Syrian flags. The general strike imposed on

Red Cross in the village. The demonstrators called for international action to free Abu Salah. There were reports of a Bezeq exchange having been set alight in the area, although the situation generally remained quiet, with police on standby outside the village preventing cars from entering. Members of Abu Salah's family charged that ber arrest was politically motivated. They said that Israeli security officials came th their house and used the same knock on the door and window as her brother Kalim, also a student at Damascus University.

They said 15 police and General Security Service officers entered the house and arrested Abu Salah.

SEOUL, South Korea - Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu was unusually cautious about disclosing the extent to which the defection of North Korea's ambassador to Egypt figured in his wideranging talks yesterday with South Korean Presidcot Kim Young Sam.

Nor would he confirm reports in the international press about Cairo being a key intelligence center for the communist North Korean regime.

North Korea's international links evidently were one of the major topics discussed by the two leaders, if only because of its export of Scud-C surface-to-air missiles to Syria as well as its subsequent provision of the requisite technology for Syria to manufacture them. Like Israel, Netanyahu said, South Korea suffers from the fear of "terrorism and ballistic missiles." Local analysts estimate that 2.3 million persons could lose their lives here if the chemical warheads believed to be in the

IDF lifts Bethlehem closure

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN

The IDF lifted the 28-day closure on Bethlehem yesterday, following several days of stonethrowing and comfrontations in the town.

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Bioyamin Netanyahu, speaking to reporters in South Korea, accused the Palestinian Anthority of encouraging street violence.

Mordechai had said the closure would remain in effect until Palestinians started to cooperate on the investigation of the Mahane Yehuda bombing in Jerusalem oo July 30. But rumors surfaced midday yesterday among the Palestinians that Israel had agreed to lift the closure. As the afternoon wore on, IDF commaoders said they knew nothing of the report about lifting the closure and that they had oot yet received such instructions. But at 4 p.m. the IDF announced it was removing the closure and troops removed the harricades that had blocked cars from entering or leaving the city. The IDF announcement said the decision was reached hy Mordechai and Chief of General Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak.

Mordechai said be bopes there is not be an explosion in the territories, which would not help anybody. "I think the Palestinians realize this, and

The military standoff between South Korea and North Korea which comprise this strategic peninsula has been a catalyst for the Seoul government's interest in Israeli military hardware. This is borne out by its recent $100 million purchase of unmanned aerial vehicles from Israel Aircraft Industries

Meanwhile, North Korea yester-day pulled out of talks with the United States on missile proliferation, saying Washington's decision to take in its two defectors was a "grave insult." The US dismissed a North Korean demand that it hand over the two diplomat brothers for trial and said it assumed that four-nation talks on the future of the Korean peninsula could go ahead in mid-September.

A North Korean official called Washington's role in the defection "a grave insult and hostility towards the DPRK (the communist Democratic People's Republic of Korea)." Ambassador Li Gun, Pyongyang's deputy UN representative, said in a statement. The US offer of shelter to the crimi-- nals seriously damaged the climate preventing our government from resuming the talks."

Doubts cast at DNA tests reuniting mother and daughter

By ARYEH DEAN COHEN

The case of a Yemenite girl who died here even before she officially arrived, and a woman who gave birth twice within six months were cited yesterday by Tsila Levine's . lawyer, Rami Zuberi as proof that documents from the period surrounding the alleged disappearance of Yemenite children were forged or inaccurate. Tsila Levine's case should he seen as a landmark case which should affect the future directions taken by this committee in its investigation," Zuberi told the Cohen Commission in Jerusalem. after Levine had told the panel her moving story.

Zuberi's counterattack came after questions about Levine's claims that DNA tests had proven that she was actually the daughter of Margalit Amosi were raised by Drora Nahman-Roth, a senior deputy to the Jerusalem district attorney, who is assisting the twoyear-old Cohen Commission in its investigation.

The commission plans to ask the DNA expert who made the match in testify, and may seek to conduct additiooal DNA tests before Levine leaves the country on September 14.

Levine was mobbed by the media upon her entrance to the committee room, where she told her story.

However, despite assuring Levine she felt badly about having to question her story, Nahman-Roth proceeded to try to poke holes in it. She noted that Levine's adoption in which she disappeared. order and identity card stated she was born in September 1948, and that her adoption took place around November of that year. However, she pointed out that in testimooy before the Shalgi Committee, and the current committee in November 1995, Amosi had testified that her daughter disappeared when she was 1 1/2 years old, and that she had only come to Israel in September 1949. "[This means] that in 1948, she wasn't in the country...It's inconceivable chronologically that she only came here in 1949, while your adoption procedure began in 1948, according to the document." She also noted that the mass aliya from Yemen only began in December 1948.

'It's possible that people on all sides made mistakes, it's possible," Levine responded.

Nahman-Roth also prodoced documents from the children's hospital at the Rosh Ha'ayin Bet camp indicating that Levine had only arrived in the camp in September 1949, and bad been hospitalized as a child for measles, malaria and other diseases, through January 1950, again casting doubt on the DNA test result. You can go ahead and try to explain this, but the facts speak for themselves," she said.

Following the recess, Zuberi immediately moved to discount Nahman-Roth's cootentions, explaining that the dispute over the dates - 1948 or 1949 - might be explained by the fact that the new Jewish year began just before the time of Levine's adoption, possibly confusing her mother regarding the exact secular year

The IDF stressed that Bethlehem is still a "closed military zone," which means Israelis are still barred from cutering the Palestinian-controlled town.

Lifting the closure means that Palestinians will now be able tn travel in and out of the city. The general ban on crossing the Green Line remains io effect.

Earlier yesterday, before the closure was lifted, IDF troops arrested 15 Palestinians in the villages of Dar Salah in the Bethlehem area and Al-Hazan east of Sur Bahir, media reports said. Palestinian sources told ltim that the majority nf those detained were linked to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and had been arrested in the past.

Mordechai said yesterday he hopes the situation in the territories does not erupt. Speaking while observing an Armored Corps exercise on the Golan Heights, he said the reason for the tension in Bethlehem was apparently the ongoing closure. He asserted the IDF is prepared for any eventuality.

Regarding the lifting of the closure, Mordechai said: "We are waiting to see that there will be effective results on the part of the Palestinians to our demands," he said.

These demands iocluded the PA taking action against Gen. Ghazi Jahali, the head of the Palestinian Police, strengthening security ties with Israel, and particularly "taking determined and intensive action against terfor in the areas under the PA they are also waiting for political moves," he said.

Acting Prime Minister David Levy said yesterday he supports the gradual lifting of the closure from the territories. In answer to questions hy journalists during a snlidarity meeting in Kiryat Shmona, Levy said he is sorry the closure and ither measures against the Palestinian Authority had had to be taken. "I'm very sorry we had to take these steps and we're acting tnward the gradual easing of them. 1 hope the Palestinian Authority will also show willingness and readiness and all the things it did are things of the past."

Levy said Israel does not want tn punish the Palestinians and added that he intends to dn everything to ensure that the Palestinian Authority will "resume a course of true security and cooperation. We for our part will gradually lift the measures and sanctions, which can't be an alternative to discussions and the honest, open, mutual concern to ensure security."

In Washington yesterday, the State Department said it supports Israel's lifting the closure on Bethlehem, calling it "a step forward in the [peace] process." Secretary of State Madcleine Albright "welcomes this deci-sion," spokesman James Rubin said, adding that the precise timing of ber visit to the region is dependent on when "the circumstances incrit a timetable and a specific plan,"

"We have understood Israel's need to deal with security threats in the past, hut we've also beeo coocerned about the effect of closures like this on the daily lives of the Palestinian people, Ruhin said

"We hope that the right balance can be struck between Israeli security needs and the economic and social well-being of the Palestinians. We do not think that making it impossible for the Palestinians to fuoction in their daily lives contributes to greater mutual confidence, or ultimately to progress in the peace process.

Syria: Israel playing with fire

Syrian Defense Minister Mustafa Tlass warned yesterday that the policies of Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu were leading the region towards war.

Tlass, according to Army Radio, was quoted in an Arabic language newspaper in the Gulf as saying that Syria was not afraid of conflict and was prepared for war if Netanyahu and "his gang" were trying to create conditions for war in the region.

MKs hold meeting in Kiryat Shmona

By LIAT COLLINS

Foreign Minister David Levy announced yesterday that a forum of MKs and ministers would meet every three months to discuss the problems of the communities along the northern border.

Speaking at the solidarity meeting of the Knesset in Kirvat Shemona, Levy told local residents: "Not a single penny should be cut from aid to the frontline communities." Although it was billed as a solidarity meeting, by the end of the day both MKs and local residents had the feeling that the special Knesset gathering bad missed its mark by a larger gap than last week's katyushas. Some 40 MKs and ministers from oearly all parties except the Arab ones made the trip up north for the session.

The tone was set when the hus traveling from Jerusalem started out late and got a speeding ticket .. The MKs were greeted outside the Cultural Center with flowers, and Defeose Minister Yitzhak Mordechai, who was OC Northern Command, was giveo a hero's welcome but the atmosphere soon changed as it became clearer that the MKs wanted to have their say first.

By the time the local leaders and residents got to ask their questions the hall was half empty. The walkout was led by Inbal Kalina whose home suffered a katyusha hit and Stephane Jaffa, a local resident took the microphone hy force to point out "You came here to listen to us, so give us a chance to speak," Deputy Speaker Meir Sheetrit looked like ould call them to on Heartfelt condolences to the family.

Regarding the medical records, Zuberi said: "What I'm going to say sounds harsh, but this is what we've learned from various documents and many feel this way. The feeling that we get, especially from the fact that a girl disappears at a hospital in Rosh Ha'ayin and is adopted in the Haifa region, and we have a DNA expert's testimony which I believe is credible ... is that we apparently cannot believe the documents from this period. When I say we cannot, I mean that we are apparently talking about forged documents.

"If this child was adopted in Haifa, he was then taken there without his parents' permission_that means the child without was kidnapped or 'stolen.' A person who can 'steal' a child can forge a document... I don't believe in these documents."

To underscore his point, Zuberi presented a document which had been shown to the Bahaloul-Minkovksy Commission, which investigated the disappearances in the late 1960s, regarding a girl named Aniya Tzfira. According to the family's immigration certificate, they immigrated from Yemen on May 21, 1950. But hospital records presented to the committee showed the girl was hospitalized on February 2 of that year, and died on April 22. "She died before she even existed," said Zuberi.

He also cited an Interior Ministry registration document from December 26, 1995 he said must have been "fed from this type of misinformation," which showed that a Yemenite woman had given birth on June 10, 1956 to her son Gavriel, on June 28, 1957 to a son

Hearing begins on Ras al-Amud plan

The construction of a Jewish neighborhood in Jerusalem's Ras al-Amud would be a security threat and harm Israel's foreign relations, attorney Yossi Arnon argued yesterday, in the first hearing by the Jerusalem District Planning Commission Appeals Committee on an appeal of the plan filed by two Meretz city councillors

The hearing was adjourned with no decision, and will be resumed in 10 days. By then, committee members are to visit the area.

Amon, representing petitioners against the project, claimed the permit issued to Miami-based businessman Irving Moskowitz to build the bomes was also not in keeping with the master plan for the area, and should never have been issued. It would create a Jewish ghetto in a predominantly Arab area and would be "like building a mosque in the middle of Mea She'arim," he said.

Israel, S. Korea sign two economic pacts

By JAY BUSHINSKY

SEOUL, South Korea - Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu and President Kim Young Sam signed two agreements yesterday. South Korea, which is US-backed, has performed one of the Far East's most astounding economic miracles since 1970, expanding its exports from $10 million to $127 billion.

Due to its rapidly rising standard of living, South Korea has turned into an exceptionally lucrative market for Israeli products. Israel's trade with this country totalled $720 million in 1996 and is expected to reach $1 billion this

This is the economic background against which Netanyahu and Kim signed yesterday's agreements, one on telecommunications and the other on technical cooperation, mainly in agriculture. The prime minister also conferred separately with his Korean counterpart, Koh Kun. Israel and Korea reached a research and development agreement in advance of Netanyahu's official visit, according to which each will contribute $1 million annually to a joint fund for the next three years. Its purpose is to facilitate technological exchange by the two countries' respective private sectors. "Korea regards Israel as a source of hi-tech capacity," the prime minister said at his daily briefing to accompanying correspondents. Kim reiterated this concept at an official dinner he hosted with his wife for the Netanyahus.

At the practical level, the chairman of the giant Hyundai business group assured Netanyahu of his firm's intention to open an electronics research and development center in Israel in November. Netanyahu noted that Hyundai's annual turnover totals $90 billion, which is nearly the same amount as Israel's GNP of $100 billion.

The Daewoo Group companies are expected to follow suit at a later date. Korea's Hanwha Group already has assigned a representative to Tel Aviv for the purpose of monitoring Israeli know-how in telecommunications and satellite communications.

Plans are being laid for a Korean-Israeli economic conference to take place next January in Israel and Foreign Minister Yoo Chong Ha has accepted an invitation to visit Israel next year.

The dramatic defection to the US recently of North Korea's ambassador to Egypt, and with him secrets about the missiles Pyongyang has reportedly provided Syria, Iraq and Egypt, will likely figure prominently in the two days of talks South Korean leadership And, as with Netanyahu's visit to Japan, a prime focus of the talks will be on economic ties between the two countries. Netanyahu began the Korean leg of his Far East trip yesterday. Yitzhak Rabin visited South Korea in December 1994, about a year after Seoul opened an embassy in Tel Aviv. According to the foreign ministry, relations between the two states have developed quickly since the opening of the South Korean embassy visit. Since that time there have been various reports of a South Korean desire to buy Israeli weapon systems. Some $720 million of bilateral trade was recorded in 1996, as opposed to $692 million in 1995, and $430m. in 1994. By comparison, in 1991, the year before Israel re-opened here, and were given a dramatic push by Rabin's household electronics is relatively small. In the last three years there has been an enormous increase in the oumbers of Korean tourists, from 13,000 in 1994, to 20,000 in 1995, after the opening of direct Korean Air flights to Israel, and 33.000 in 1996.

By AREH O'SULLIVAN

The Judea and Samaria Civil Administration has ordered a Hamas charitable organization closed for two mooths after searches there found material praising the suicide bombers who killed 14 persons in a Jerusalem market last month. Other material encouraging future terrorist attacks was also found.

Soldiers shut the Islamic Association for Orphans in the village of Bani Naim, near Hebron, late Tuesday night, said civil administration spokesman Lt. Peter Lemer. He said the searches uncovered books, magazines, video tapes, and pamphlets inciting terrorist activity against Israel and praising the suicide bombers.

"The charities are part of the civil infrastructure of Hamas. They are the support system by giving employment, medication, and educational assistance to Palestinians. The committee provided the movement's activists with services, encouragement, and incentive for recruitment to Hamas," he said.

The crackdown on Hamas and Islamic Jihad institutions is part of the ongoiog war against terrorist organizations, said Lerner. While the IDF shut down the five-room offices of the Islamic Association for Orphans, its school for 250 orphans remains open.

The goods exported to Korea are primarily electronic and medical supplies, and the imports are made up primarily of automobiles and electronics. Depending on who one talks to, the reason for the closure was either an act of reciprocity toward Korea, which refused to open an embassy here, or a diplomatic blunder by Dayan. According to the latter theory, Dayan did not anticipate South Korea's meteoric rise as an ecocomic power, and closed the ministry to cut costs. Efforts to reopen the embassy were rebuffed until 1992.

Levine said she knew very little else about her adoption until her father died to 1967, and her mother told her the story.

"She told me how father picked me out," she said. "They knew that they couldn't have any children of their own, and they really wanted to be parents, They heard there were children to choose from in the home of a doctor on the Carmel in Haifa, used as a oursery."

Levine said her mother told her that the couple had decided to choose a boy, but when ber father passed by her crib, "I laughed at him twice, as if I knew him. My mother told him: 'Let's go look at the boys,' but he said: 'There's no need; I found my little girl."

"My mother didn't know much more than that about the adoption. Maybe she asked, but I doo't think she got any answers, because she told me she didn't know anything. But I also think people who want to be parents so badly don't ask too many questions.7

Levine said that when a new law was passed in 1976 allowing adopted children to get information about their biological parents,

In December 1993, she tried to get information again by phone, but was told her file had been "lost in Jerusalem." In April, 1994, she was told by phone by an official in Haifa that "there was oothing new, and if anything changes, we'll tell you.'

"Two years go, I gave up, to tell you the truth. I thought maybe I wasn't intended to know the truth, and I wouldn't know. My life went on; I didn't stop functioning. #### Panel to probe impact of psychometric exams

Education Minister Zevulun Hammer has decided to establish a committee to investigate the impact of psychometric exams on youngsters, particularly disadvantaged youth.

Hammer, who serves as chairman of the Council of Higher Education, noted the tests were a major criteria for gaining accep-tance into the nadon's universities. This, he said, has led to the development of an entire "industry" that prepares pupils for them, Hammer said the time has come to investigate how these tests affect pupils from the weaker sectors of society. # High school teachers threaten strike

The Secondary School Teachers Association announced yesterday its 40,000 members would not open the school year on Monday unless they receive a written commitment to cancel the firings of tenured teachers and to restore job slots that have been eliminated.

The teachers involved number some 500, union chairman Ran Erez told a press con-ference in Tel Aviv. "The Education Ministry so far refuses to give us such a commitment," he said. "We are no longer willing to be satisfied with a verbal 'It'll be okay "Until we see with our own eyes that these tenured teachers who were fired have returned to work, that jobs which were cut have been reinstated, and that the school hours that have been cut are restored, we will not open the school year." Erez accused Education Minister Zevulun Hammer and Director-General Benzion Dell of deceit. "The educational system has been cut and they are presenting the budget for a long school-day as if it were a great victory, while it had to come into being any way after the Knesset approved it. "The big cut in the Education Ministry's budget reflects the policy of the government, which changed the priorities and doesn't consider education to be at the top. The country doesn't have any oil or gold other than its human resources. This is what is most worthwhile investing in, and if we don't invest we'll have to pay for it in a few years."

The teachers who were fitted come from both the technological-scientific and acade. mic streams in vocational schools. Most of those dismissed come from schools in Or Yehuda, Ashdod, Yehud, Acre, Kirvat Yam, and Rosh Ha'avin.

In another effort to avert a strike, Teachers Union secretary Avisham Ben-Shabbat yesterday sent a letter to Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu urgang him not to allow the education budget to be cut. (ltim)

No more school health fees

By JUDY SIEGEL

The district health offices are prepared for the new school year, as responsibility for supervision of health services in educational institutions returns to them from the local authorities. A total of NIS 68 million has been allocated by the Treasury to cover the expenses, which will not require parents to pay a school health fee.

in addition, the ministry is preparing lessons on health promotion that will be part of the school curriculum.

More doctors and public health nurses have been assigned to the district health offices, and the project is being coordinated by Dr. Adaya Barkai, head of the ministry's mother and child department

The program includes vaccination and medical examinations, health promotion, first aid, a medical registry, school sanitation, and participation of school doctors and nurses in parent-teacher assemblies.

Last year's supply of health services by the municipalities was regarded as a failure, as they hired manpower agencies to save money and many parents complained the services were substandard or nonexistent. The parents' association refused to pay school health fees, arguing that such services should have been paid for by health taxes on income.

The following vaccinations will be given to pupils this year, measles, rubella, mumps, and polio in the first grade; diphtheria and tetanus in the third grade; rubella (to both boys and girls) in sixth grade; a tuberculin skin test in seventh grade.

SEOUL (Reuters) - Dire economic straits will stop Pyongyang from abandoning overtures to the West despite its anger at Washington's decision to grant asylum to two North Kotean defectors, political analysis said

North Korea yesterday demanded that Washington hand over its ambassador to Egypt and his brother, whom it said defected to the US to avoid punishment for embezzling public funds and leaking state secrets.

However, North Korea watchers said they did not believe that fournation peace talks, the goal of Washington's policy of cautious engagement with Pyongyang, was threatened. They noted that an acute food shortage forced Pyongyang to accept the talks, involving Secul as well as Beijing and Washington, despite its reluctance to deal with South Korea.

"The North will probably bring up the defection and an extradition demand, but it can't afford to change its policy to break out of international isolation," Seoul Deputy Foreign Minister Lee Ho told Reuters. "Our government does not expect the defection to have any major impact on dialogues with Pyongyang. The North sees better ties with the US as an exit from economic min."

"Both the United States and North Korea have been careful not to offend each other," Yu said, noting Pyongyang refrained from accusing Washington nf kidnapping the diplomats, while US officials played down the significance of the defection. North Korea watchers said ambassador Jang could reveal secrets on his country's arms sales, particularly Pyongyang's missile sales to Iran, Syria and Libya. Egypt was Pyongyang's Middle East headquarters and defense analysts said Jang had access to innermost infor-

from their posts in late July and been ordered to return home for judicial investigation for embezzlement of a large sum of public funds, degeneration and leakage of state secrets," the Pyongyang spokesman said. "They are thought to have escaped for fear of legal punishment over their crimes

"We do not believe that this action is a manifestation of any crisis in the leadership of any kind," State Department spokesman James Rubin said. "We don't believe this will have any effect on the missile talks nor do we believe this will have any effect on the four-party talks."

Pyongyang and Washington were due to resume missile talks in New York later yesterday.

Another State Department official said North Korea had given "positive confirmation" on Tuesday morning that the missile talks would go ahead.

PAWTUCKET, Rhode Island (AP) - He's been seen hanging out with the Hamburglar and may even sneak a French fry or two, but don't let that fool you.

Ronald McDonald has joined community policing programs with mini police substations at some restaurants in at least five states.

The cops aren't looking for people cheating on their diets, rather, they provide a place for police to get some paperwork done while socializing with the locals.

Central Asia's rude awakening

The post-Soviet Moslem republics face diplomatic pressures from abroad and cultural-economic challenges from within

By SUSAN SACHS

BAKU, Azerbaijan - Every evening people escape their hot, cramped apartments and stroll the wide boardwalk along the Caspian Sea, breathing in the smell of crude oil, backfiring Soviet-made cars and grilled shish kebabs with the tepid summer air.

Giggling Russian girls in miniskirts and stiletto heels point at the Iranian women io loe-length overcoats and tightly fitted scarves who shuffle behind their husbands. Laughing Azeri families, dressed in the ubiquitous rayon dresses and printed polyester shirts sold in all the new Turkish shops downtown, share warm boilles of Coca-Cola.

When the Soviet Union was alive, Azerbaijan was one of the most sequestered places io the world. Like the other front-line Moslem republics ranged along the Communist empire's southern flank, it formed an impregnable barrier against the outside world. Foreigners could not look in. Insiders dared not look out. But Central Asia and the Caucasus have awakened like Rip van Winkle. History shook the kaleidoscope and rearranged the cultural, economic and diplomatic pieces. And while most ordinary people still wait to be delivered from lives of poverty and political corruption, their once-closed nations are under brisk assault from the outside world and its money, Islamic politics and diplomatic intrigues.

The scene on the Baku boardwalk is repeated throughout the region, where city streets buzz with American oilmen, Turkish religious teachers, Iranian traders, Pakistani military advisers, European bankers and Russian spies. For some of these outsiders, especially US and European oil companies, the prize is the enormous mineral wealth lying under the Caspian Sea and in the vast desert wastes that stretch across much of Central Asia.

Estimates vary, but experts generally agree that Caspian basin energy reserves rival, at the very least, those of the volatile Persian Gulf and the storm-cursed North Sea. Gas reserves, principally in the desert of sparsely populated Turkmenistan, are the thirdlargest in the world.

For others, the prize is renewed political and religious influence in an area that, by virtue of geography, is one of the world's oldest trade crossroads. Turkey, for instance, regards the region as its linguistic and ethnic backyard. Thanks to a relations between religion and state subordinates Islam to secular power. That appeals to the region's strongman rulers, and most have welcomed efforts by the Turkish Diyanet, or state religious ministry, to open spacious new mosques, schools and Islamic institutes, and 10 sponsor training of hundreds of would-be imams.

For all its good intentions. however, the Turkish government has been unable to match the buying power of privale Turkisb religious groups that have a more zealous and decidedly more conservative view of Islam. Although under fire from secularists at home, they have found a niche in the old Soviet republics, where public educa-tion bas collapsed for lack of топеу.

These religious foundations have opened dozens of low-cost private bigb schools throughout the region that not only offer a beavy dollop of Islamic studies, but actively discourage such secular teenage pursuits as dancing and music.

The West, the United States in particular, encourages Turkey's ambitions to bring the newly independent Moslem states inlo its orbit and reduce their dependency on Russian trade, transit routes and military might. But tugging from the south is also Iran, which claimed its own privileged cultural and political role in the region.

Jusi as its power to export fundamentalism to the Middle East was waning and US economic sanctions began to bite, Iran saw its entire northern border suddenly opened to a new world of opportunities for propaganda and trade with its Moslem neighbors of the former Soviet Union.

In the political sphere, Iran first focused on the mountainous little nation of Tajikistan, which has a substantial Shiite Moslem minority and speaks a variant of the Persian language, Farst. Iran set itself up first as a sponsor of the Tajik Islamic opposition movement there, and then, after a few years of civil war fueled by clan conflict and fundamentalism, positioned itself as a peace-broker.

But there are built-in frustrations to Iranian aspirations in the especially in next-Azerbaijan. Iran is home to 21 million ethnic Azeris - three times the number in oil-rich and free-wheeliog Azerbaijan itself. That's a statistic that makes officials on both sides of the border nervous. "Iran is concerned that the Azeris' rather loose Islam will infect their brethren across the border or that independent Azerbaijan will become a magoet," said a Western diplomat in Baku, speaking on cooditioo of anonymity. "The Azeris fear an infiltration of Islamic fundamentalism." Indeed, Islam, long suppressed by the Soviet regime, is being revived in the region as a convenient symbol of rejuvenated national identity. But the controls are Soviet-style: Only those Moslem prayer leaders and teachers who pay obeisance to the ruling regimes are allowed to operate without barassment in most countries, leaving more radical Islamic groups to ferment dangerously underground. In some countries, Uzbekistan and Azerbaijan for example, Islamic activists have been jaded by the dozen. The leaders justify their bard line by pointing to their neighbors, where Islam and politics have already coalesced to topple secular rulers. In particular, the bloody civil war in neighboring Afghanistan, where various clans practicing differing degrees of Islamic radicalism still fight for control of the war-wracked country, reverberates over Central Asia like the thuoder of an approaching storm. So far, the only Islamic political party operating openly in the newly independent states is in Tajikistan. The party, the United Tajik Opposition, waged war on the Moscow-backed regime, and its leader, Said Abdullah Nuri, is set to share power with it under a recently signed peace accord. Even if Tajikistan's Islamists prove too weak or preoccupied to influence, their neighbors in Central Asia and the Caucasus, homegrowo poverty, unemployment and repression could achieve the same result. "Three years ago, I would have said there could be no religious activism bere," said Layla Unisova, a secular political opposition leader in Azerbaijan. where few Moslem families fail to wrestle open a forbidden bottle of wine or champagne for a special meal. "But let's face it. We live on the border of the

The modern Turkish model of Islamic world. If people stay hungry, with no food and no education, religious fundamentalism has fertile ground to grow.

In the 19th and early part of the 20th centuries, Central Asia saw a spate of uprisings led by charismatic Moslem preachers against Russia's imperial occupation.

Passing through those old powder kegs in the countryside of what is now Uzbekistan, the traveler finds it hard to imagine them as vanguards of a holy war. The only movement is the splashing of naked children in mud puddles and the staggering of oxen in the hunnd heat.

Dusty, dun-colored buildings sit like giant blocks of concrete dumped on the flat landscape.

But the real Technicolor life of traditional Central Asia flourishes, as it always has, inside family compounds. Sunflowers as hig as dinner plates sway in the gardens. Apricot trees hang heavy with summer fruit. Hand-dved silk cushions in pinks, corals and vellows provide scating.

In the countryside, the mood is bleak and often angry that religious freedom has come with limits and conditions.

This government is against Islam," said a young woman in the Uzbekistani lown of Margilan who risks arrest hy secretly teaching the Koran to neighborhood girls. "There is no work. We can barely afford bread. And now they want to keep us from our religion." Outside the capitals of the region, prosperity is a distant dream.

Industry and agriculture have barely been restructured after decades of Soviet central planoing. Banks are starting from scratch in learning about letters of credit and trade. The development that has occurred reflects the whims and contrasting priorities of each autocratic ruler.

Take oil-rich Azerbaijan, which has signed productionsharing contracts worth billions of dollars with oil companies from around the world but done little to improve on its sullen, old Soviet-style service or crambling Soviet-era infrastructure. Most roads remain potholed ditt tracks. Rusting derricks and pipes, abandoned decades ago, litter filthy roadsides.

The minarets of soaring new mosques, illuminated inside by shimmering imported chandeliers, poke above the skyline. New parks studded with luxuriant fountains dot the city, even though most apartment buildings have water for only a few hours each day.

The portrait of President Saparmurad Niyazov, who calls himself Turkmenbashi, or leader of the Turkmen, hangs outside every building. "The potential in Central Asia is tremendous, especially in Turkmenistan because of its proximity to Turkey and the (Persian) Gulf," said Richard Pitchford, vice-president of the Central Asian-American Eoterprise Fund, who has worked io Uzbekisman and now runs the small-business loan agency's Foreign businesses have to learn to live with the rampani corruption and a system where family connections, tribal links and bribes count. Azerbaijan's President Heider Alivey appointed his son as vice-president of the powerful state oil company. In Uzbekistan, President Islam Karimov's son-in-law controls the lucrative Coca-Cola business.

But things are changing. Nepotism and being part of the elite are still important but more and more it's money - American dollars, if you please - that counts.

WASHINGTON - In a highly unorthodox initiative aimed at alleviating a growing glut of physicians, the federal government has agreed to pay hospitals around the country hundreds of millions of dollars not to train doctors.

The initiative, embedded in the new federal budget agreement, extends to all 1,025 of the nation's teaching hospitals, an offer similar to a controversial experiment approved for New York earlier this year.

That experiment, which will pay New York hospitals $400 million over the next several years, as they gradually decrease the number of young doctors they train, drew an outcry from teaching hospitals elsewhere that felt New York had wangled a lucrative special deal. Their protests attracted the sympathy of congressional Republicans who decided that, instead of trying to block the money for New York, they would expand the opportunity nationwide.

The payments represent a rare attempt by the federal government to use subsidies as a leverage to shrink a particular workforce. "I know of no profession where there has been as much federal effort to regulate," said Uwe Reinhardt, a health economist at Princeton University. "You don't do it for economists, for architects, for engineers." The payments also are the government's first effort to constrict the pipeline of people entering the medical profession. Several influential groups have warned lately that the nation has too many doctors, particular-ly specialists, and have urged the federal government to impose limits on the comber of recent medical school graduates, known as residents, who pursue several years of advanced training before beginning to work on their own. Bot until now that advice has met with legislative resistance.

The New York experiment and the nationwide initiative hinge on changes in Medicare, the large federal insurance program for the elderly and disabled. Since it began, Medicare has underwritten residency training programs heavily and has, in effect, made residents a prized, inexpensive kind of labor for their hospitals. Taxpayers spend $7b. a year on such training.

Until now, many teaching hospitals have been reluctant to cut back, because every resident translates into an average subsidy of $100,000 a year. "It has not been financially rewarding to downsize," said Muncey Wheby, associate dean for graduate medical educatioo at the University of Virginia.

Under the budget agreement, hospitals that downsize will not get extra money outright. But if they volunteer to reduce their residency programs by 20 percent or 25% over five years, Medicare will cushion the financial blow. For the first two years, it will pay the whole subsidy for the missing residents. After that, the payments will taper off for three years. The agreement also for the first ome essentially forbids hospitals to increase the care" plans that favor treatment by lowerdicted that perhaps a dozen of the state's 75 teaching hospitals would be interested. Instead, 42 rushed to sign up. "A lot of instituoons were sitting on the fence" about whether to train fewer residents, said Kenneth Raske, the association's president. "This pushed them over."

But the special arrangement for New York infuriated teaching hospitals in Boston, Texas and other parts of the couotry. For example, the parent company that owns Massachusetts General, and Brigham and Women hospitals in Boston, two of the country's most prestigious teaching hospitals, had just set in motion a plan to traio 20% fewer specialists, with no federal help.

The experiment also angered the leadership of the Honse Ways and Means Committee, which had been considering its own ideas for cutting back the number of doctors and felt preempted by Vladeck. What the administration proposed was a sweetheart deal," said Ari Fleischer. spokesman for the committee's chairman, Rep. Bill Archer (R-Texas).

But, Fleischer said, "the administration did put its finger on a growing national problem. So Congress thought it was better to extend a good policy to the nation."

He said the subsidies were consistent with Republican preferences for market solu-tions to health-care problems. "It remains a voluntary matter of choice for these teaching hospitals," he said. "It isn't a mandate." Still, the idea has its criocs. "It is voluntary, but it isn't voluntary for the taxpayer, said the Heritage Foundation's Moffit.

Others question whether it is necessary. The number of young doctors training to become anesthesiologists, for example, has declined from about 1,500 three years ago to 450 this year following well-publicized warnings that the field was saturated. Starting a few years ago, "people weren't able to get the plum jobs in the cities they wanted. (They) would have to take jobs in Idaho, Oklahoma," said James Kottrell, chairman of anesthesiology at the State University of New York Health Center in Brooklyn.

On the other hand, Jane Matjasko, chairwoman of anesthesiology at the University of Maryland Hospital in Baltimore, said her hospital had to spend extra money to hire 10 doctors after its training program was reduced recently from 40 residents to 20. Without federal help, she said, the hospital could not afford similar cuts in many other programs, (The Washington Post)

Administration health officials and leading Republicans say that the initiative will give hospitals a powerful incentive to train fewer doctors and that Medicare will save money in the long run. After five years, the payments will cease and the program will have fewer residents to underwrite.

But others suggest that hospitals will be rewarded needlessly for cutbacks that some have started to make without being paid to do it.

Time to come clean

o Israel, the emotional reunion of a mother who was put up for adoption, after the mother and daughter after 50 years is usually coupled with stories of concentration camps in war-torn Europe. In the case of Margalit Amosi and Tsila Levine, it was not the Nazis that were to blame for their separation, but still-mysterious events that left dozens of Yemenite Jews believing that their missing children were taken from them for adoption.

The airlift of Yemenite Jews in 1949 and Ethiopian Jews in 1991 cootinue to stand as monuments to the willingness of Israel to not only welcome but to actively bring in entire communities of people in distress. Each was a brilliant demonstration of what it means to be a Jewish state, with a commitment to a people beyond ber borders that may be unique in world bistory.

Given the extreme efforts made to bring these communities to Israel, the subsequent legacy of official insensitivity and paternalism becomes particularly sad and ironic. The stories of bow officials, whose European socialist and secularist ways stood at opposite poles from the Yemenite Jewish traditions, would try to force the new immigrants into becoming "Israelis," remain bitter memories to this day.

The most serious charge of all, bowever, has been that Yemenite infants were kidnapped and put up for adoption, while their parents were told their babies were missing or dead. Three commissions were created to investigate this matter, the Bahaloul-Minkovsky Commission in the late 1960s, the Shalgi Commission, which labored from 1988 to 1994, and now the twoyear-old Cohen Commission, which heard testimony from Tsila Levine yesterday.

The Sbalgi Commission investigated 505 cases and found 65 cases in which the disappearances of children could not be explained. Yet that commission, like the preceding one, found no indication of criminal activity or illegal adoptions.

Yet the commissions have clearly not succeeded in convincing the Yemenite community that the their children were not deliberately taken from them. Judging from the case of Amosi and Levine, the suspicions may not bave was told her baby was "missing."

At the hearing yesterday, Levine was ques-tioned about records that seem to contradict her story, but Levine's lawyer retorted with numerous examples of records that bad ioternal contradictions (such as death dates before birth dates). If, in fact, this and previous commissions relied upon shoddy or forged records to make their case, it is not surprising that they have not succeeded in getting to the truth.

Until now, the cause of the Yemenite children has been both promoted and discredited by the violeot tactics of self-styled rabbi Uzi Meshulam, whose followers have now been charged with planting a homb at the Petah Tikva Magistrate's Court oo August 18. Meshulam has also inspired the diggiog up of graves of Yemenite babies who the parents suspect did not die but were in fact adopted. Though a number of the graves looked empty, forensic experts claimed that nothing could be concluded without a more professional investigation.

The tactics of Meshulam and bis followers cannot be condoned, but it is past time for Israel to face head-on this very disturbing chapter in its history. There are too many people with harrowing stories for this issue to be dismissed.

Many countries bave chapters in their bistories that they would rather forget and yet refuse to go away. Fifty years seems to be common time period for such problems to resurface - the Jewish bank accounts conveolently forgotteo by Swiss banks and suspect medical experimeotation by the US Army come to mind.

What was done cannot be undone, but after balf a century, the least the government owes the victims of such outrages is to come clean. The whole truth may never be found, but more must be done than to bury the problem with partial conclusions based on suspect documents. The calls for establishing a national data bank to belp people to try to find their lost parents or children should be heeded.

Not all adopted Yemenite children will, like Tsila Levine, feel a compelling need to find their biological parents - after all, the clock cannot be turned back. But those who want to fol-

A doomed initiative

The latest US initiative to salvage the Israel-Palestinian negotiations will fail because, following a promising shift in US policy announced by Secretary of State Madeleine K. Albright oo August 6, the administration lost its nerve. It supported Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's demand that Palestinians make good on their commitment to wage total war against terrorist organizations in the territories without also demanding an Israeli commitment that if Palestinians comply, Netanyahu will implement the obligations undertakeo by Israel under the Oslo Accords.

To be sure, there can be no peace negotiations if Yasser Arafat remains willfully neglectful of terrorist activities in areas under his control. Nctanyahu is right when he insists there is no moral equivalence between terrorist bombs and buildozers that clear the ground for new Jewish housing in Jerusalem. But the peace process did not collapse because of terrorist outrages in Tcl Aviv and Jerusalem. It ground to a halt, well before these events, largely because Nctanyahu and his government oppose territorial concessions for peace and insist on continuing the calargement of Israeli settlements in the accords. In her important policy address, Albright recognized the inseparability of Palestinian measures to assure Israel's security and Israeli measures that "address the legitimate political rights of the Palestinians people." That is why she proposed accelerating finalstatus negotiations and establishing a clear sense of "the ultimate

Negotiations are futile without an acknowledgement of the principle of viable Palestinian statehood direction of negotiations" so that both sides can regain confidence "about where the negotiation is leading."

Unfortunately, Albright did not put forward an American understanding of where the negooarions must lead because it is impossible to restore confidence between the

has made it impossible for him to proceed with Oslo. The Oslo Accords remain stuck in his throat, and he can neither swalluw them nor cough them up. The other explanation is that Netanyahu is doing precisely what he wants to do, namely prevent any further accommodation to Palestinian demands. His "vision" is one of continued Israeli military control of a series of isolated islands of Palestinian autonomy. Whichever is the case, a deadlock in the negotiations that Netanyahu can blame on the Palestinians ideally serves his purposes. And terrorism plays directly into his hands, for it coables him to claim the high ground and to impose conditions for a resumption of negotiations without holding out any prospect of change in his government's policy, which is precisely what he has now done.

An American initiative that fails to link explicitly Palestinian measures to fight terrorism with Israeli measures that mect Palestinian needs can only reinforce deadlock. The US position should be that while the war on terrorism is a precondition for continued negotiations, Israel must make it possible for Arafat to wage that war by indicting what

Now you have to get a bunch of people, lock yourselves into a building, pile up gas canisters, bottles of kerosene and torches, and threaten to blow yourselves to kingdom come. Otherwise, you're not worth anybody's attention.

territories. Unilateral Israeli actions that preempt issues that were supposed to be discussed in the final-status talks are as insurmountable an obstacle to further negotiations for Arafat as terrorism is for Netanyahu. In real life, Arafat will not risk his leadership with the Palestinians in undertaking a total war against terrorism absent an assurance that, if he complies, the Palestinian agenda will also be seriously addressed.

This entails far more than an Israeli promise to return to the negotiating table, or to rescind the devastating public measures imposed on the residents of the West Bank and Gaza following last month's bomhing. Rather, it means a clear commitment to halt new settlement activity, to proceed finally with a safe passage between Gaza and the West Bank, to open a Palestinian airport and scaport in Gaza, and the implementation of the next two with-

The details of that statebood, the cxact location of borders, arrangements for water, and respective claims to Jerusalem can only be negooated betweeo the parties themselves, hut ocgotiations are futile without an acknowledgement of the principle of viable Palestinian statehood on conoguous territory in Gaza and most of the West Bank.

DESPITE Netanyahu's eloquent statements about his commitment to peace, it is an undeniable fact that since he assume power, the peace process has ground to a halt on all fronts - with the Palestinians, with the Syrians and Lebanese and with the outer rim of Arab couotries in the Gulf and in North Africa. There can be only two reasons for this. The first is that the fragmentation of Netanyahu's governing coalition

In her address, Albright reiterated the principle of land for peace as the basis for negotiaoons, and added importantly that "the legitimate political rights" will be addressed. Indeed, Netanyahu has in effect told the Palestinians that they will not achieve their national objectives if they fail to exert a maximum effort to fight terrorism, and if they do engage in such an Bang, hum, blow - whatever, When in Israel, do as the Israelis do, and this is how it's done.

There are a lot of government ministers and other leaders and commentators saving how we have to learn to talk to each other. listen to each other, become more civilized. This is the word from on high. On the ground, the opposite is happening.

First Meshulam, then the homeless, then the Labor Party bureaucrats. Next it will be husbands and wives at home. I gct the car today, dear, or I will lock myself and the kids in the laundry room and hlow ns all to bell.

Coalition crises will be settled a new way. No more threats to vote oo-confidence in the governmeot; instead the religious parties will hole up in their offices and vow to level the Knesset unless the conversion bill is passed.

Soon bombs won't be enough, and eco-terrorism will emerge. Move it, driver, or I'll poison the Kinneret. Get behiod me, mister, or I'll elimb into a crop-duster and spray plague all over the land. Cluck, cluck, what are we to do? The only answer is education, isn't n? The schools should prepare lesson plans on why gas canisters are not a proper negotiating tool. We could have public service TV spots. Why not put it on CD-ROM?

No, I'm afraid the Siege of Hayarkon was our education, our real-life education, on what's considered proper in Israeli socicty these days.

But there might be another way to teach the right lesson. The next time a group of Israeli adults decides to play at mass suicide, let them play it to the end. Let the police clear out as much area as needed, and tell the folks inside that if they want to go, well, have a nice trip.

Let them also know that if they choose life, there won't be any hugs waiting for them when they give up, only handcuffs. The yahoos at Hayarkon must have committed a couple of dozen crimes, and I can't understand why they weren't charged, but it's not too late.

This country feels like it's bursting. The molecules are whizzing around and bouncing off each other so fast. Some people are ready to explode. I don't know if we can stop them, but I wish we'd at least stop encouraging them, the recent death of Charles Kuralt occasioned media praise for the wisdom of the common man and woman, the ordinary American who, without formal training or access to power, was able to produce penetrating sound bites for Kuralt's odes. While it's true that Kuralt exalted the voices of the great unpolished, his common folk spoke of whatever they wanted, no matter how mundane. Kurali's characters produced heartwarming dispatches generally designed to give viewers a flavor of American life without showing its bite; such are the sanitized necessitics of network relevision.

> robes, and then to his epiphanies about being used by respectable whites in a class-division game.

Terkel's interviews dig provocations out of accepted history - such that for most people are abstractions, like his late '80s interview with an Iowa farmer fighting off creditors. At times Terkel seems almost like the Jesse Jackson of the mid-'80s, an itinerant pain-sharer, ers were actually given a media voice, compared to members of Congress or think-tank denizens? To Terkel, such skewed conceptions are unthinkably obscene, and his insistence on documenting the flow between the personal and political often yields surprising results.

Terkel speaks to a cab driver who supports the Christmas bombing of North Vietnam because "We can't be a pitiful, helpless giant. We gona show 'ern we're No. 1." Asked if he feels like No. I, the cabbie says, "I'm number nothin'," and launch-es into a brief, worful litany of a departed wife and smack-addicted kid. The cabbie quickly steers the conversation back to the necessity of fighting the war.

When Terkel seeks to make a point about the evils of nuclear arms, he finds not an academic or professional protestor, but Jean Gump, grandmother and mother of 12, who took time away from PTA and League of Women Voters meetings to break into a military site in Missouri and spraypaint "Disarm and Live" on a missile silo. Her justfolks storytelling smoothes over the glaring audacity of her actions. When a rifle-toting guard rejected her explanation that her "funny circulation" would not allow her to keep her hands in the air, "I said, 'Shoot me.' He chose not to, which I thought was good." Gamp received a six-year prison sentence.

As Robert Coles suggests in his introduction, Terkel's work owes much to the development of the tape recorder, and this book is best thought of as an album of voices, similar to those one would listen to in a museum. There is some reflexive nostalgia here, and more than a little nonsense, but Terkel's insistence on getting his subjects to complete their stories allows readers to sift through the nonsense and see the gems.

This will likely be one of the last books that Terkel, now 85, will produce. When he is gone, he will deserve all the celebration Kuralt received and more; thankfully, his subjects are already more permanent than Kuralt's, thanks to the accessibility of the printed page. (Newsday) attended by novelists, artists, poets, critics, Fortune 500 CEOs, film critics, Wall Street bankers, and attorneys. Under the stimulating and innovative guidance of Rabbi Burton Visotzky, professor of Midrash at the Jewish Theological Seminary, they examined how the narratives of Genesis apply to the ethical issues we face today. This seminar eventually evolved into the astounding public-television series Genesis: A Living Conversation, hosted by Bill Moyers, which has swept the United States.

Genesis may be interpreted theologically, critical-ly, politically, historically, or psychologically, but it Visotzky's genius to view it in terms of family dynamics. He sees the Bible from a whole new perspective, relating it to our own immediate concerns. After all, he is professor of Midrash, and Midrash is the classic way in which rabbis view the Bible through the lens of their own times - finding new ways to understand these ancient sentences.

Visotzky's style is hip and historical, scholarly and "street smart," researched and relevant. As he points out, the Book of Genesis can be seen as "an ngly little soap opera about a dysfunctional family ... a story about rape, incest, murder, deception, brute force, sex and blood lust." But its stories reveal much about human dilemmas and ethical problems that mirror and thus inform our own times in a personal way. The haunting stories of a father who is about to sacrifice a child, a man who tricks his brother (one even commits fratricide), daughters who seduce a father, a man who is approached by a prostitute and fathers his own grandson unknowingly, are all dealt with in loving engagement. The tensions in Genesis are contemporary. Dina has no voice - will feminists stand for that? If Hamor and Shekhem have been circumcised to join Jacob's family, then Shimeon and Levy are killing fellow Jews. If Jacob has a special program of animal busbandry, is he using genetics to deceive his father-in-law? Moral dilemmas are often messy, like life itself.

Visotzky uses Genesis for our own moral development. This has been the hallmark of two millennia of serious thinkers and commentators of all faiths. It is an appropriate look as we now encounter end-of-the-millennium angst. Moral grandeur emerges if we honestly examine, discuss, and internalize the narratives of Genesis. The moral growth of Joseph from a spoiled brat to a despised sibling, to a slave and prisoner, to a sexually tempted man, to the savior of Egypt speaks to all of us. Joseph says, "It was God Who sent me as a life savior before you," and he reshapes the tribal ethic into something greater, which becomes divine.

As Visotzky points out, studying Genesis, and, more important, discussing the text, can help us to understand ourselves and our lives as we struggle for meaning. That struggle is universal because there are now two sets of ethics.

Burton Visotzky has created a remarkable and valuable approach to Genesis. And it is good.

IN THE WAKE of this approach and the Movers television series has come a flood of books. When Karen Armstrong returned to London after appearing on the two-month Genesis program, she was so stimulated that she wrote another book. Indeed, who else but a former nun, teacher in a rabbinical seminary, and author of books such as A History of God and Muhammad, would have the hutzpa to entitle her commentary In the Beginning?

Armstrong's exciting and refreshing work deserves thonghtful reading. The book views the stories through the prism of her strongly held views about God's unknowability and the folly of some current denominations in second-guessing Him/Her. Genesis is one of the lonis that men and women have used, a ready dimension that transcends their normal lives.

During the rebellion of the counterculture in the Sixties in America, William Sloan Coffin, Jr. mounted the pulpit at Rockefeller Chapel in New York to address demonstrators. As he began to speak one of the demonstrators should, "Religion is a crutch." Coffin shot back, "So who isn'l limping?"

Armstrong appropriately begins ber book with the account of Jacob wrestling all night with a mysterious stranger and discovers at dawn that he has been struggling with God. In this episode she sees the distant past throwing light on the present. But her thoughtful and challenging interpretations require discussion and often deep debate. For example, in the Noah story she sees a holocaust and wonders about the behavior of God. Don't we? In Abraham she observes someone trembling between faith and a radical break with the past. Isn't this our problem now?

DAVID ROSENBERG'S collection of essays by writers and poets, Genesis: As It Is Written, is decidedly post-modern. Rosenberg, who has been engaged in poetic translations of the Bible for years, has come up with a stunning anthology penned by some of the most creative minds in our time. This is a work of cultural outreach that breaks down barriers between religious and secular, which didn't exist in the biblical writer's day. Arthur Miller demonstrates how the fall from paradise defines human existence; James Carroll sees Abraham dealing with uprootedness, marginality and otherness; Kathleen Norris presents a fresh perspective on Rebekah as a mother, and there are many more insightful, original essays.

"The universe is not made of atoms, but stories," wrote poet Muriel Rukeyser. These stories in Genesis were fashioned to help explain the universe and ourselves, and they continue to do so. Those who are interested in these issues -- and who is not? -- will find these three books a good beginning.

Naphtha Israel Fetroleum Corp. acquired the government's 99.92 stake in the Israel National Oil Corporation (INOC) for $25.5 million, the Government million. Companies Authority aunounced Tuesday.

The transaction is subject to the approval of the Knesset Finance Committee and the Antitrust Authority.

The Ratio group, which includes US oil executive Jerry Mandale, bid $25m, for INOC, while the group headed by Yitzhak Alush, in association with Lev Leviev and the Kastenbaum family of the US, bid $23.5m.

"After requesting the three top bidders to improve their bids, we then gave the leading two an extra chance to improve their offers," a statement released by the Government Companies Authority explained. "At the conclusion of the process, Naphtha's improved offer was the highest bid."

Seven companies originally participated in the tender process.

The authority said that between 1994-1996, INOC lost NIS 30m. In recent months, it executed a NIS 15m, shaft sinking venture in Nissanit, near the Hrez check point, which came up dry.

So far this year, the government has raised more than NIS 3.7b, by selling part or all of its holdings in Bezeq, Israel Chemicals, Yozma and the Discount, Leunu and Mizrohi hanks

The government aims to sell NIS 4b, in state assets by the end of the year.

Among the companies the gov-emment has yet to privatize are the Israel Electric Corporation, Zim, El Al and Israel Aircraft Industries.

Israel's exports to Asia grew by 7.1% in the first six months of the year to $1.99 billion, from $1.86b. in the same period one year ago, the Industry and Trade Ministry reported yesterday. Industrial export was down, and raw material imports for manufacturing stabilized, after having risen in May.

The annual rate of inflation rose to 10%-11%, exceeding the official limit set by the government of 7%-10% for this year and for 1998.

Meanwhile, Yoram Gabbai, head of the government-appointed Gabbai Committee which suggested a series of economic reforms earlier this year, forecasted a drop in per capita output and in the Reports Tadiran that Communicatioos won a $20 million tender to provide tactical communications computer systems to the US Marines are accurate, a company spokesperson confirmed. Tadiran Communications, Tadiran Ltd.'s defense communications business, will sign the contract in the next few days, the spokesperson said. The company expects future contracts to follow.

"In this field, one contract generally leads to another and to another," the spokesperson said. "There is great potential here."

Tadiran's tactical communicatioos machinery allow soldiers to the field to receive visual information about the battlefield via handheld computers.

Before soldiers in the field could only receive audio information, but these computers allow soldiers to see the information on screen," the spokesperson said.

Tadiran Communications also announced its interest in expanding its market share by buying a communications factory. The company is currently considering several options, most of them in the US.

Tadiran Telecommunications, Tadiran Ltd.'s most profitable division in the second quarter of the year, currently has $300m. in orders. Eighty-five percent of the company's annual revenue comes from overseas sales.

Tadiran Ltd.'s second-quarter net profit dropped 73% to $14.1m. compared to the same quarter in 1996. The company attributed the drop to the decrease in local sales, adding that it is currently refocusing its efforts on streamlining its business and increasing exports.

Following the release of the quarterly report earlier in the month, Tadiran Ltd. said it expects Tadiran Communications to receive about $100m, in new contracts by the end of September_

In addition to its defense communications division, Tadiran Ltd. has holdings in the telecommunications equipment, electronic systems, appliances and batteries, and software field

TASE stocks rise led by banks RKET INDEXES STOCKS

By DAN GERSTENFELD and Bloomberg

Tel Aviv Stocks in Tel Aviv gained for the first time in five trading days after banks, including Bank Hapoalim, the country's biggest, rose. Bank Hapoalim rose 0.75 percent after M.I. Holdiogs, which holds the government's assets in banks, received valuations for the bank that exceeded its current market value.

Bank Leumi rose 0.5 perceot and Israel Discount Bank rose 1 percent. The Maof Index of 25 issues rose 0.31 percent to 296.6 and the Mishtanim Index of 100 issues rose 0.30 percent to 288.56. The general bond index fell 0.10 percent. "The market's mainly driven by two things: Bank Hapoalim and the fact that Blue Square's results weren't as bad as people expected," said Yuval Raviv, an analyst eovering Israeli stocks at Londoo's Societe Geoerale Strauss Turnbull.

Blue Square rose 0.99 percent after it announced earnings. Analysts bad expected Blue Square to do pooriy, because Israel's economy has slowed, and after rival ebain Supersoi reported disappointing results earlier this month, he said.

Blue Square said second-quarter net income was NIS 18.5 million ($5.3m.). little changed from NIS 18,4m. in the same period last year.

Koor Industries Ltd., Israel's biggest publicly traded industrial company, closed unchanged after it announced second-quarter earnings in line with expectations. Koor said its second-quarter net iocome dropped 48 percent, as slower economic growth burt the company's businesses.

Koor earned 40 cents per American depository receipt.

UK stocks rose as the mark strengthened, fueling optimism for exporters and countering yesterday's decline by US shares. Banks also sputted the market, amid speculation Abbey National Plc could be the larget of a takeover offer, with Lloyds TSB Group Plc pegged as a possible candidate.

The bencomark FT-SE 100 Index of icp stocks rose 28.9 points to 4915.2, rebounding from an earlier fall of as much as 2i points. "Clearly Wall Street is still playing a major part, and speculation that German interest rates will use is unsettling markets." said John Hatherly, head of research at M & G Lto., which controls 10 billion pounds ($i6.1b.) in UK equities. "Bui excorters have suffered the

On Tuesday, the Bundesbank chose to leave German interest rates unchanged. Most investors suil expect they'll rise soon. Exporters such as Reuters Holdings Plc and TI Group Ple rose oo optimism the strength of the mark will help boost profits. Reuters, whose oiggest market is Europe, soared 19p to 644 and added 1.8 points to the FT-SE 100. The pound had climbed more man 13 percent this year against the mark, causing many companies to cut profit expectations as their sales abroad were diminished once they were converted into pounds.

Japan's beachmark Nikkei 225 stock average feil to a four-month low, led by semiconductor shares such as Fujitsu Ltd. and NEC Corp., after chipmakers were downgraded to by Nomura Financial Research Ceoter.

"Nomura is the proverbial 500pound gorilla - what they say has a lot of impact," said Scott Callon, vice president in the financial strategies group at Morgan Stanley Japan Ltd. The benebmark Nikkei fell 373.04 points, or 1.98 percent, 10 18,441.94, its lowest level since April 22.

Hideki Wakabayashi, a Nomura senior analyst, cut profit fore-casts of six chipmakers for the year ending March 1998. citing lower prices for 16- and 64megabit dynamic randoni-access memory.

He downgraded the iodustry group to "neutral" from "strong" in a report released yesterday after the market closed.

"We're seeing profit-taking in the electrical shares as word of the Nomura downgrade spreads," said Takeshi Yamaguchi, a fund manager at Taiyo Investment Trust & Management Co., which handles 1.5 trillion yen ($12.7 billion) in securities.

The Topix index of all shares on the first section of the Tokyo Stock Exchange fell 23.13 points, or 1.58 percent, to 1442.78. Decliners outpaced advancers four to one.

Nikkei 225 index futures traded in Singapore fell 325 to 18,440. Those traded in Osaka tetl 300 points to 18,460.

NEW YORK (Reuters) - Bluechip stocks closed higher vesterday as sellers called time-out after wrestling the market down for four straight sessions.

Based on early and unofficial data, the Dow Jones industrial average edged up 5.11 points to 7,787.33 after losing nearly 240 points since last Thursday.

In the broader market, advancing issues led declines to-t1 on more active volume of 494 million shares on the New York Stock Exchange. The Nasdaq composite index rose 4.25 points to 1.595 55. The Dow had spent most of the day limping lower, dutting as low as 7,700 before late huy programs sparked a rumaround.

Analysts said there was no fresh news, and investors braced for Thursday's titst revision of second-quarter gross domestic product.

Experts surveyed by Reuters foreeast, on average, that the report would show annualized GDP growth of 3.3 percent during the second quarter, up shatply from 2.2 percent in the initial report.

Among active issues. Novell Inc. closed at 9-3/8, down 19-32 on the day after its chief executive quashed runnors that the computer network software company night be bought by International Business Machines Corp. The rumors propelled the stock night-Tuesday.

Dollar sets three-week high versus yen The dollar rose to a three-week high against the yen after a top Japanese finance official expressed concerned about the economy and reinforced expectations that Japan's interest rates won't be lifted soon. 'I ant more concerned about the economy than I was two months ago," said Eisuke Sakakibara, vice minister of finance for international affairs, in an interview with the Financial Times. His statements contrasted with more upbeat assessments by Japanese officials earlier this year. The remarks served as an official acknowledgment that Japan is not recovering fast eoough from a five-year ecocomic slowdown to prompt the Bank of Japan to raise record-low interest rates.

His comments confirmed that no one's expecting a rate hike any time soon," said Doug Lee, a corporate currency trader at Sakura Bank Lid. Japan's recovery is tepid at best."

The dollar rose as high as 119.30. its inghest level since August 6. when it reached 119.00 year in New York Jading the dollar row 10 118 84 yen from 118.15 yen on Tuesday. Against the mark, the dollat rose to 1.81095 marks, from 1.7970 marks yesterday. Reports released Monday showed sales at supermarkets, department stores, and electronic retailers fell in July for the fourth straight month, an indication that an April tax increase continues to drag on consumer spending.

Speculation thal the Buodesbank might boost its benchmark securities repurchase rate from historic lows intensified yesterday after reports that German inflation topped the vields on the benchmark bank's target ceiling of 2%. mark, traders said. (Bloomberg)

Consumer prices in western Germany rose at an annual rate of 2.3% for the six months to mid-August, the Bundesbank said.

The mark's weakness fuels inflation by boosting the price of imports. Higher rates would strengther the currency and thas itent inflation by interest grobal investors to mark-denominated deposits and bonds. At the same time, higher interest rates could also underwine Germany's fragile economic recovery by making it more expensive for companies to take out loans and expand. It would also make it more difficult for the country to create new jobs to combat high unemployment. The dollar's strength against the yen also helped it gain against the September gasoline futures opened 0.91 cent lower from 62.90 eents a gallon or, the New York Mercantile Exchange. The American Petroleum Institute said in a report after trading Tuesday that US inventories surged 1.7 million barrels last week lo 189.5m, barrels. Refineries last week operated at their highest level since API record-averaging 1.7m. barrels. Crude keeping began, boosting gasoline supplies at a time when demand is because US refineries operated at declining. Demano fell last week to a record level last week, and crude oil imports feil. Any gain in crude prices, though, is likely to be lim-7.9m. barrels a day, the lowest since the week ended June 6. Analysts surveyed by Bicomberg ited by failing gasoline prices.

September copper fell as much as 0.9 cent to 98.9 cents a pound on the Contex division of the New York Mercantile Exchange. Demand in North America and Europe has been slow for the summer because of seasonal reductions in operations at manufacturers and other users.

Copper stored in London Metal Exchange warehouses has jumped 125 percent since June 20 to 273,200 metric tons. Still, the rate of the stockpile increase has slowed as summer winds down and manufacturers increase production. (Bioomberg)

US bonds rise before Treasury's note auction -

US bonds rose for a second day amid expectations the Treasury's sale of $11.5 billioo in five-year notes will meet strong demand. "We're seeing better interest in bonds," said Jim Madelmayer, a government bood trader at Dresdner Securities Inc. Toe firm started to see buying from lostitutional investors Tuesday for the first time in several days, he said. The benchmark 30-year bood rose 7/32, or $2,19 per $1,000 bond, at 96 3/4. Its yield fell 1 basis point to 6.63 percent. The two-year note yielded 5.94%. The government on Tuesday met better-than-average demand at its sale of $15.5b. of two-year ootes, based on the bid-to-cover ratio - the dollar amount of bids received compared with the debt sold. Investors said the securities were attractive after recent declines in Treasuries pushed yields higher. In trading before yesterday's auction. securities firms exchanged promises to deliver the five-year note at a yield of 6.20% 'whenissued," down 1 basis point from Tuesday. "People would like to see a little more of a concession in price, but it should go all right," Dresdner's Madelmayer said.

Some investors may be reluctant to buy securities before tomorrow's government revision to secood-quarter economic growth. The Commerce Department will probably increase its estimate to a 3.3% annual growth rate, from 2.2%, according to a Bloomberg News survey of economists.

"A big revision up is expected," said Jane Berryman, senior fixedincome analyst at Technical Data. A figure above 3.3% could "cause a meltdown," pushing down prices, she said.

Faster growth is typically asso-ciated with inflation, and might prompt the Federal Reserve to boost bank lending rates. "There is lingering concern that the economy remains strong and will evenwally push up inflatioo." said Mike Ryan, a government bond strategist at PaineWebber Inc. Expectations for another quarter-point Fed move before yearend are reflected in futures on Eurodollars, or dollars on deposit outside the US. The securities are among the most sensitive to Fed rate expectations.

The December contract for three-month Eurodollars has an implied yield 5.92%. That is 19 basis points above the curreot rate for three month borrowing, indicating that investors see a good chance of another Fed increase by mid-December, when the contract expires. Fed policy makers last changed interest rates in March, raising the target for overnight lending between banks a quarter point to 5.50%.

To be sure, some analysts said strooger growth does not necessarily mean the economy is overheating, or presage another Fed rate rise. Just Tuesday, the government said US factory orders for big-ticket items fell 0.6% in July, the second drop in three months.

Turks frustrated Maccabi's outside shooters.

Maccabi suffered from defensive lapses and lackadaisical cross-court passes as well. Those were converted by Ankara into a beyy of second-chance and transition points.

On the defensive end, the experienced Millitsevic abused Maccabi's new 23-year-old import Rashard Griffith, with spin moves and driving hook shots. That problem was compounded by the lack of any defensive help from Maccabi's guards.

Coach Zinko Yelovatz is hopeful that Maccabi's problems will disappear when Nadav Henefeld and Doron Sheffer recover from their injuries.

Phillies 4, Padres 2 Mike Grace (1-0) won in his first major league appearance since May 1996, allowing two runs and six hits in seven innings. He missed the second half of the 1996 season with shoulder trouble, then strained his right triceps during spring training.

Tony Barron drove in two runs for host Philadelphia, 24-19 since the All-Star break. Ken Caminiti went 3-for-4 for San Diego, which has lost eight of 10.

MUNICH (Reuters) - Jose Maria Olazabal is banking on extending his timely return to form into the BMW International starting today to clinch automatic selection for the Ryder Cup.

The Spaniard holds the last of the 10 aotomatic qualifying places ahead of the final European Tour event here in which players can earn points that guarantee a Cup spot. Statistically, any player down to 24th position in the points table can win selection for next month's match against the US at Valderrama, Spain, by collecting the £120,000 first prize this weekend.

The current top seven golfers in the table are safely home and dry to take on Tom Kite's team, and Italian Costantino Rocca looks a near certainty in eighth place. But the other two automatic spots are still op for grabs.

After missing the cut in last weekend's European Open in Dublin, Dane Thomas Bjorn is ninth ahead of Olazabal who, though 11th, effectively holds the final automatic slot because injury has ruled out fellow Spaniard Miguel Angel Martin.

Olazabal produced a fine finish in Dublin to take joint third place, patting him only 16,218 points behind Bjorn, and Ireland's Padraig Harrington is just 21,944 points behind him in 12th place.

. With players earning a point for every pound they win, the Irishman could edge out Olazabal without having to finish any higher than seventh on his own in Munich. Yet even if that happened, Olazahal still seems almost certain to make the Cup team as captain and compatriot Severiano Ballesteros own pick England's Panl Broadhurst, in 13th spot, could get in with a top three finish, but realistically he needs to be in the top two and pray that Olazabel and Harrington miss the cut.

For those from Broadhurst down to 24th, though, a list which includes Ryder Cup veterans Sam Torrance (16th) and Mark James (17th), only a win will give any chance of making the team.

Torrance, who sank the winning putt when Europe broke the long-standing sequence of US victories in 1985 at The Belfry, and James have been mooted as wild card hopes when Ballesteros names his two picks 45 minutes after the automatic placings have been decided on Sanday.

However, if current positions are unchanged and Olazabal makes the team automatically; Ballesteros is more likely to go before stx-times major whener Nick Faldo and in-form Swede Jesper Parnevik.

Cape Town's Olympic bid is full of Good Hope

CAPE TOWN (Reuters) - Denying Cape Town's hid to hoat the 2004 Olympic Games would be a failure of imagination, a faltering of the spirit, a dismal triumph of accountancy, a rendezvous with history irretrievably lost.

So say true believers.

They also say it will be a now-or-never moment for all black Africa on September 5 when the 2004 Olympic venue is decided: their city is deserving in its own right but must carry the day for the sake of the whole continent.

Cape Town is one of the world's unique settings, a natural amphitheatre of looming crags, dark timbered slopes, towering banners of cloud, lush valleys, dusty plains and ceaseless surf that pounds the miles of pale strand.

Its black, white, Indian, mixed-race, Moslem, Hindu, Christian, rich, poor, striving people have one thing in common: they love this magical place of masts and mountains, poinsettias and palm-trees, gusting winds and blowing whales.

Visitors are seduced by an end-of-theworld setting, where the last warm breath of Africa leaves the land at the Cape of Good Hope, and the South Atlantic meets the Indian Ocean.

Compared with the sheer physical lure of the Peninsula and the powerful symbolism of Africa entering a oew millennium, local arguments against the Games seem worthy but dull.

"We could well use the money bener for the things we badly need," says one pensioner with a lingering English accent. "That's the point you people fail to see," says a son of the Cape who harbors no such doubts. "There is no 'money' sitting waiting to be spent in whichever way; either the Games come here and attract the investment, or it goes elsewhere." But Cape Town has a dark underside.

On the road in from the airport, just as Table Mountain emerges majestically from the morning's reef of cloud, a sad vista of tin and cardboard shacks spreads out across the plain.

Ragged children play in the dirt with broken bits and bobs.

The dusty shantytowns, apartheid's legacy, cluster like warts around the jewel city, mocking its fashionable aspirations and self-appointed chic, refusing to disappear, and fueling a level of crime that worries some Olympic chiefs. Yet "If Cape Town wins, we all win," claim the bright 2004 bid-city billboards on the bighway. Cape Town real-estate has been discovered lately by the foreign jet-set, but the city remains true to its seafaring roots, with that tarry, salty, fishy, up-in-the-morning-early feel of a hig, busy ocean port.

At dawn when the fog rolls up through highrise canyons past the morning cafes and the big hotels, passersby turn up their collars and it takes on the breezy glimmer of San Francisco.

There are fine restaurants, classy local wines, spicy curries and char-grilled steaks from the South African Veld.

The pastel architecture is a mixture charming old Dutch and Georgian colonial styles juxtaposed with thrusting modern structures all trying to be a little different. Europeans put down here 350 years ago as a stopover on the way to the boundful East. But the region's natural largesse persuaded them to settle and, as usual, exploit the locals.

Around Table Mountain, in sedate Constantia and leafy Kirstenbosch - an arboreum of imported woods - big villas nestle in private copses and stately mansions lie hidden up the valley among tall Eucalyptus.

This is whitey's turf, in what is still the whitest of South African cities, in the province where Mandela's ruling party is outvoted. In some eyes, it has as much io common with the real Africa as a Rolex on a naked herdsman's wrist. The same scepticism can apply to the idea that a Games for Cape Town is a games for Africa, say some critics who note that the local Olympic bid committee seem to have come rather late to that idea.

But Cape Town is African history. Black and European destinies crossed here at the dawn of colonialism, and it was here last year that colonialism ended, when the majority black parliament adopted a new, democratic constitution.

Of the five 2004 Games candidates, this city is the only one in Africa, the continent represented by the fifth ring of the Olympic symbol, the continent where anthropologists say bumankiod was born and first hunted - the wellspring of all sport - but a contineot which has oever hosted the Olympics.

Those who believe in the power of the Games, including President Nelson Mandela's government, want the international recognition and are sure that all here will benefit.

and a second sec

"Cape Town's bid is Africa's own. It is part of the African Renaissance, part of our confident assertion on the world stage," says Mandela, the boxer-lawyerfreedom fighter who became the country's first black head of state in 1994.

Mandela will be 86 in 2004, and this is likely to be his only chance of seeing the Olympic flame light the African night. The Games have been staged on the four other continents," he says. "Now is the time for Africa to complete the five Olympic rings."

With their hard-won victory over apartheid, the system of "separate development of the races" meant to establish permanent white supremacy, South Africa's people defeated racial elitism and raised high an Olympian ideal of democracy.

They also killed off a stubborn political virus that threatened to overcome international sport altogether, and unleashed in its place a bealthy rash of free competition, not only in muscles and tournaments but in African trade. Nevertheless, it is possible that the Lausanne Olympic meeting will shun Africa, to opt for Rome, which hosted the Games in 1960, or Athens, their home in antiquity.

Thais cancel PGA events due to economic woes

BANGKOK (Reuters) - Golf has become the latest victim of Thailand's economic crisis, with at least three Thai PGA Tour golf tournaments canceled after sponsors pulled out due to financial difficulties.

Three tournaments with total urses of 5.5 million baht ($181,800) were cancelled and a fourth worth 1.5 million baht might also be pulled, said Pongnat Vatanasak, secretary general of the Thai PGA.

It is because of the economic situation. All the major sponsors have up and pulled out," he said.

Once one of the fastest-growing economies in the world. Thailand has just negotiated a $16.7 billion international bailout package to try and revive the economy, which has slowed to its lowest growth level in decades

Classic rock at Mike's Place

By ANY KLEIN

ive music can be hard to come by in Jerusalem. If you're willing to suffer the injustices of knee-knocking furniture, smoke choke and a sea of overseas students - all in the name of good music - try Mike's Place at 10 Horkanos Street in Jerusalem's Russian Compound.

Hazy and loud, Mike's Place is a small rectangle of a room that looks like it was someone's basement turned into a makeshift bar. There are low chairs and tables, wood cubicies, and stools by the bar with a tender who might lend a sympathetic car if he could hear anything. There is even scaing "upsuirs" - i.e., on the sidewalk outside the ber, where the music swells through the windows.

What makes it all worthwhile is the live bands. From 10:30-ish to 2 a.m., in the far left corner about an inch away from the tables, a different band performs every night of the week. Most of them lean towards classic rock, with covers of the Stones, Clapton, Steve Miller, et al.; but each band has its own unique flavor.

On Sandays, for now, it's Wolfman, and Mondays has Clandia, a raspy-sounding raggedy-looking band. Tuesdays stand out with Southbound Train, a jazzy-rock or a rocky-jazz band that also plays Delta blues (the down-and-dirty "real" blues from the deep South). Wednesdays is usually one of the best rock nights with The Scoobic Brothers.

Jerry's Missing Virginity pulls in the largest, oldest and yappiest crowds with its Grateful Dead, Fish, and Aliman Brothers covers. Members of IMV play in the more famous Ein Safek, a hand that plays Dead, Circlebach, and their own blend of music.

The weekend is also way-crowded, with Grunging Ginger on Friday, and on Saturday nights, the artist still known as Sarphen sings sweetly and plays a smooth guitar and harmonica.

Open from 5 p.m. to 3-ish (depending on how crowd-ed it is), Mike's Place offers the usual drinks: 1/2-liter bottle of Carlsberg or Tuborg goes for NIS 10, a pitcher is NIS 30, and a mixed drink NIS 15-18. They have something called The Elephant for NIS 12, which is like a Carlsberg but with 7% alcohol. They don't serve food (except free pretzels). Happy hour is nightly from 6-8 with beer at half price.

So why's it called Mike's? A number of stories - which all might be true - abound. One is that it was named after a university bar in Carlina, Canada. Another is that the original owner of the bar, Mike, skipped town about three years ago, leaving an ex-wife, some debts and the bar, which is one of the few in the Russian compound that seem to have customers during the week.

Whatever the real story, the only Mike at this seedy but cozy har is the one the singers croon into, long after most of Jernsalem has called it a night.

Voice of the Turtletaub

The writer of the new movie 'Roseanna's Grave' describes himself as an 'Orthodox-style' Jew testimonial ded dinners, Turteltaub is one of the few members of the entertainment industry to enlist in the less glamorous, foot-slogging work of daily Jewish community life. He has done so while writing and/or producing some 1,500 been equally active in promoting Israel Bonds and currently serves as vice-president of the regional chapter.

Turteltaub appreciates his status-raising role as a screenwriter. though he is not too enchanted with the finished product.

In the original version, Mason was to have been married to Redgrave, but Turteltaub refused to go along with the concept. He said he could accept a Jew and Gentile falling in love, "that's an emotional reaction," but he couldn't endorse intermarriage.

In youth-worshiping Hollywood. where writers in their late thirties are considered over the hill, Signature of the second with for Borscht Belt comics and has been one of American TV's most prolific comedy writers for four decades, is celebrating his very first movie credit as the settenwriter of For Roseanna, aka Assianna's Grave. The film deals with a trattoria owner (French actor Jean Reno) in an Italian village, who desperately tries to keep all the residents alive to save one of the few remaining plots in the local cemetery for his ailing wife (Mercedes Ruchl). Despite the somewhat somber subject, and mixed reviews, Turteltauh's comic flair predominates and the film, directed hy Britain's Paul Weiland, winningly alternates between tender middle-age romance and robust humor. Producer Norman Lear hailed his old colleague's achievement, declaring that "I know a lot of guys who are 35 and who are far older than Saul. He's a life force. If this doesn't send a loud message to an industry that needs a loud message, I don't know what would." Turteltaub is also notable for a less-recognized achievement. While it is not uncommon for Hollywood personalities to write or to accept plaques at star-studpisodes in more than 30 comedy television series, including Kate and Allie, What's Happening, Sanford and Son, Love American Style, That Girl, The Corol Burnett Show and The Jockie Gleason Show.

Shortly after moving to Los Angeles in the 1960s, Turteltaub and his wife, Shirley, joined Beth Jacob Congregation of Beverly Hills, the leading modern Orthodox synagogue in Los Angeles. "I am not as strongly Orthodox as most of the congregants," among them a high percentage of writers, he says. "I'm more of an 'Orthodox-style' Jew." His most consistent involvement has been with the Entertainment Division of the United Jewish Fund, the money-raising arm of the Jewish Federation Council. He served as the division's chairman generous checks for Jewish causes in the late 1980s and continues as a member of its cabinet. He has

The show lasted a mere eigh weeks, partially because Mason was wrong for the part, Turteltaub says. "Jackie is a reactor not a proactor, he's best when he's kibbitzing." But that was then.

As for now, Turteltaub's belated screenwriting career is taking off. He has finished a script for Mel Gibson, who will direct the romantic adventure story, also set in Italy, while another feature deal has been sealed with Miramax.

His musicality is so natural and free of inhibition that it captivates more than things in more stylized form. His naturalness can be compared to that of Gypsy violinist Dinicu, who composed Hora Staccato. Heiferz recorded it but said 'When I hear Dinicu, I think I should go back to school - hut no school can teach you what Dinicu had." Feidman has that same kind of naturalness."

A La Carte Party time – Georgian style

By DANIEL ROGOV

fter returning from a trip to Tbilisi, the capital of Georgia, novelist Lawrence Durrell observed, "I have travelled nearly everywhere, but have never been feted and feasted as luxuriously and with as good grace as here. Among all the peoples of the Soviet Union, only the Georgians bave made hospitality and cookery the most important aspects of life."

Durrell was not alone in being impressed with the generosity and luxury of the Georgian table. Festive Georgian dinners start off with a large variety of zakuski. Although these are supposed to be hors d'oeuvres, many hosts, competing to set the most luxurious tables, include many dishes that one would hardly think of as starters. Often set out-of-doors on a single table, cheeses, vegetables, a variety of yogurts, salted cucumbers, pickled garlic cloves and sprigs of coriander and tarragon sit alongside platters of smoked sturgeon, liver paté, salted herring, caviar, sliced sausages, pickled mushrooms and plums. If they are really trying to impress their friends and neighbors, the zakuski table also will include meat, poultry and fish pies, whole stuffed geese and turkeys, a variety of shishliks and kebabs. Not infrequently, a whole baby goat or lamb will be spitroasting over a pit by the table. Whatever is offered, there always will be at least one large place of the extraordinarily popular beans in plum sauce. And, because Georgians take enormous pride in the wines they produce at home, as many as 12 different kinds of wine may adom the table. Vodka, drunk neat, ice cold and in a single gulp from tiny glasses, always is available and wealthier families also serve the local version of champagne. Despite the enormous amounts of alcohol consumed, the favorite drink of Georgians remains tea. According to tradition, men drink from glasses and women from cups, but both sexes take their tea without milk and sip it through a sugar cube held between the teeth. Many Israelis are pleasantly surprised at their first exposure to Georgian food. Located in the Caucasus mountains bordering Turkey, and having trade and cultural exchanges with Iran for many years, the cookery style of Georgia has a closer kinship to

Sometimes I think that the best pickled ginger served with it. When consuming copious amounts, I often felt that it gave me a lift, but until recently I always assumed that this was just my imagination.

The name ginger comes from the Latin translation of the Sanskrit word sringavera, meaning horn-root, since the root's shape is remaniscent of the horns of an amimal.

Once part of the official pharmacopoeia of ancient Rome, this simple root and spice has been known for thousands of years not only for its culinary use, but also for its medicinal benefits as a physical and spiritual cleanser. First used in India - the home of Ayurvedic medicine - ginger is a popular ingredient in medical treatments throughout the Far East. In fact, it is the fifth most frequently used of all Oriental remedies.

Medical practitioners sometimes prescribed it wrapped with bread, the precursor of today's gingerbread cookie. It also was mixed into a beverage to create the first ginger ale. Chinese sailors used to chew ginger to prevent seasick-ness. In ancient Greece, it was used to soothe the stomach. According to Chinese medicine,

Tip for Gastronomes

From the day that Dalia Renaud opened her intimate bistro in Jerusalem about a year ago, I have consistently considered hers to be one of the very best places for informal dining in the country. Renaud, who has trained with some of the best chefs in Europe, has an unqualified love for the food of Alsace, and the dishes she offers are Alsatian at its traditional best.

My most recent visit to ber bistro was inspired primarily by the desire to sample several of the dishes Renaud has added to the menu since her recent working visit to the Auberge de l'Il, where she worked with chef par excellence Marc Haberlin. We tried three first courses, the first a country-style paté of chicken breasts and liver that had been folded together with spinach and pistachio nuts before being wrapped in bacon. Just coarse enough, with full rich flavors added to, 1 believe, by a touch of Cognac, the dish was a delight.

The second dish, a terrine of vegetables, was made unusual because instead of the supersmooth terrines one usually receives, it was made up of cubed vegetables set around a center of slices of goose breasts and beets.

Nor could we resist trying a portion of Renaud's lightly sauteed goose liver. Served with a sauce based on Calvados and with a jamlike confit of oranges, the foie gras was exquisite. If the dish was faulted at all, it was because it had been served with lentils, the mild binemess and graininess of which did little to add to the texture and flavor of the liver.

version being offered, which is a Our main course, a perfect, paté, also contains water, salt, almost 6-cm. thick fillet of beef. was made special by the use of spices, sugar, ascorbic acid and

Although setes, which grow only in certain parts of France, are not as expensive as truffles, they are very highly regarded by gastronomes for their earthy, almost chocolate-like richness and fine texture.

By this time, we had caten quile enough but, because Renaud is a world-class pastry chef, we went on to two desserts, the first a super-rich mousseline of currants and raspberries, the second a lalticed plum tart. Fortunately, my lunch companion is a close friend, and our argument over which was better did not lead to blows between us.

Anyone who has enjoyed dining at Alsatian restaurants such as Auberge de l'Ill, Buerhiesel or Maison des Tanneurs will feel completely at home here, for this is Alsadan cooking at its very best. Including a reasonably priced but good wine, the average bill for two will come to about NIS 250 and I consider that excellent value for money. Those on a budget will find that dining on the daily specials is even more reasonable.

Bistro Dalia Renaud: 10 Rehov Agrippas (in the alley), Jerusalem. Open Sunday-Thursday from 11 a.m. to midnight, on Fridays from 11 to 4 and 7 to midnight; and on Saturdays from 7 p.m. to midnight. Tel. (02) 625-7647.

Cookies from America

The American company Keebler has recently introduced six of its best-selling cookies to the local market. Two of the cookies are basically vanilla flavored and contain either pecans or almonds. The other cookies, in the company's Chips Deluxe series, contain chocolate chips. One of those is enriched with peanut butter, one has giant-sized chocolate chips, another contains chunks of milk chocolate and the last contains sugar-coated candies in a variety of colors. All contain wheat flour, peanut flour, molasses, sugar, palnı oil, salt and eggs, and are enriched with vitamins and minerals.

Those who enjoy the sometimes monotonous flavor and texture of mass-produced, mass-marketed cookies will find that these are perhaps just a bit richer than most of the other similar products now on the shelves. Whether that makes them worth the price, of between NIS 14 and NIS 16 for 500-gr. packages, depends largely on one's desire to consume taste and aroma additives and a collection of chemicals, including polysorbate 60, sorbitan monostearate and monoand diglicerides.

What to do in Israel

Hong Kong's harbor is still one of the busiest in the world. The only evidence of the change of regime is in the stalls full of leftover "handover souvenirs." (Hong Kong Raussn Assoc.)

Hong Kong – what was all the fuss about?

ong Kong is more than just a place to buy a duty-free musical camera. It is one of the most impressive cities in the world, a crossroads of the cultures of east and west. Only few kilometers from the Manhattan-like shopping malls of ceotral Hong Kong there are remote villages where the locals lead lives that have changed little over many generations. Most people know that Hong Koog is an island off the southern coast of China. It is, but the territory of Hong Kong is a bit more than that - 235 islands and a cbunk of mainland sharing a border with China. The center of Hong Kong island is the business district, called Central, and it is adjacent to the honky-tonk area of Wanchai made famous by Richard Mason's 1957 novel The World of Suzie Wong. From Hong Kong it's only a seven-minute ferry ride across the world's busiest - and most beautiful - harbor to the Kowloon peninsula on the mainland. The tip of Kowloon is the shopping and tourist ghetto of Tsimshatsui. Beyond Kowloon lie the New Territories which border China and the remaining 234 islands that make up Hong Hong. At midnight on June 30, in a magnificent display nf British pomp and ceremony, Her Majesty's Government returned Hong Kong to China after governing it as a crown colony since 1841. If nothing clse, the handover was great for the tourist trade - all hotel rooms in Hong Kong had been booked solid for the occasion since 1990. Many had wanted a last look at the teeming, bawdy, noisy capi-talist capital of Asia they knew and loved because Jeremiahs had predicted that the Chinese would drag it down to the socialist doldrums. They need not have worried. I visited Hong Hong a month after the handover, and except for stalls full of leftover "handover souvenirs" it was as if nothing had happened. There are oo Chinese soldiers patrolling the streets, waiting to trample the population with their tanks à la Trananmen Square, In fact, one can't even find a Chinese soldier to photograph. The tokeo Chinese garrison, 1,500strong, is strictly confined to barracks. The Chinese promised that Hong Kong would handle its own internal affairs and, as of this writing, they appear to be keeping their promise. For starters, this means Israelis still do not need a visa to visit. However, you will need a hefty wad of traveler's checks. Today, a decent hotel room cannot be had for less than around $130 a night. Beware of cheaper hotels that beast rooms with "private bath, air-con-

Hong Kong was once full of cheap, colorful youth hostels.

The most famous were those concentrated in a run-down building on Nathan Road, Kowloon, called Chungking Mansions. Alas, Chungking and all the others are now filled with tough migrant laborers from African, Asian and eastern European countries.

ONE OF the principal attractions of Hong Kong has always been shop-ping. While it is true that the city resembles one gigantic shopping mall, a quick look at the price tags should convince you that these days Hong Kong is not quite the bargain it's cracked up to be.

Imported goods like Japanese-made cameras and electronic gadgets can be bought for much less in the US, and even in some countries of western Europe.

2000 C. 🕱 👘

That said, it is almost impossible not to be infected by the shopping bug during your stay, so it's wise to take some precautions. Remember that the bargains to be had are on locally manufactured goods. Goods which require low technology and a lot of manual labor - such as clothing, footwear and luggage - are the best bargains.

> Israells still do not need a visa to visit. However, they will need a hefty wad of traveler's checks.

Be aware that most Hong Kong merchants who live entirely off the tourist trade base their marketing philosophy on a simple equation: Tourist equals sucker. You may feel great after bargaining down the price to half of what the storekeeper originally demanded, but remember that the shopkeeper is still mak-ing a profit, and if you hadn't bargained you would have been taken for a ride.

The best way to get a fair deal is to get far away from the tourist areas - and ensure that the goods have price tags. You don't have to go to the backwoods; rather, try the shopping malls that are frequented by the locals. One recommended place is the New City Plaza in Quarry Bay on Hong Kong Island. Restaurants are naturally a lot cheaper if you eat where the locals do. However, that's not always so easy, especially if you are not turned on by local snacks like seaweed, pigs' trotters, snakes' entrails and dogs' testicles. Remember that the food served in your friendly neighborhood eating place in Hong Hong bears no resemblance to what you might eat in a Chinese restaurant in Tel Aviv or New York.

Sadly, many tourists who can't look at another noodle or another plate of dim sum - let alone a crab's claw - find themselves, against all their swom intentions, eating a frightening number of meals at HONG KONG'S nightlife is world famous - but you get only what you pay for. Red-blooded single men on the prowl who plan to search Wanchai for their own private Suzie Wong especially need to be forewarned. The days of the adorable "yum-yum" girls with hearts of gold have disappeared forever.

In fact, no Hong Kong girl has worked the bars for years. Sure, there are literally thousands of establishments where you can be served a drink by a Philippine or Thai or Russian migrant laborer wearing nothing but an imitation Seiko watch. They'll even speak to you in a friendly fashion. But it will probably be the most expensive chat of your life, because you will presented with a bill of about $100 for "speaking to the barmaid." And if you protest, two fit-looking Chinese men - obviously experts in the martial arts - will appear at your elbows. They accept credit cards.

However, don't despair - some of the best parts of Hong Kong are free or inexpensive. These include walks along the waterfront at Kowloon, from where you get panoramic vicws of the harbor (worth doing both at night and in daylight); taking the tramway up the Victoria peak for the views from the top; visits to the floating restaurant at Aberdeen and to the beaches at Stanley, at Deep Water Bay and at Repulse Bay.

Most travel agents and package tours allow a week at the most for visiting Hong Kong - enough time for brief tours of the above halfdozen attractions plus the obligatory shopping jaunt.

But if you give yourself longer and make an effort to get out of Central and Tsimshatsui, you will find even more.

An hour's bydrofoil ride away is the 500-year-old Portuguese colony of Macau, with its classical European architecture and its exciting casinos. To the north of Hong Kong Island are the more remotelypopulated islands, with their hidden temples and unspoiled beaches, Transport by ferry, train or bus is cheap and efficient.

Even further north, adjoining the New Territories, are some of the most accessible, interesting parts of China - but that's a whole different story.

There are many ways to get to Hong Kong, among them a direct flight from Tel Aviv to Hong Kong's Kai Tak airport. The best time to visit is autumn. Winter is cold and foggy, and summer is hot and humid, with the ever-present danger of typhoons.

The "kibitzer" at bridge is an expression used to denote someone who watches others play at the table. Its original connotation. bowever, was that the person not only watches but offers his unsolicited opinions. Bridge etiquette dictates that kibitzers are to remain in their seat for the duration of a deal, keep quiet, and watch only one band. This etiquette doesn't apply to bridge games played on computer. Last week, the second "Goldway match" took place on the OKBridge computer network. Five hundred kibitzers watched one table of bridge in the comfort of their own home as two worldfamous partnerships squared off in a three-hour session. Since nobody could see the kibitzers, they were allowed to leave their chair, drink coffee, and watch as many hands as they wanted.

On the computer screen you have the choice of "sitting behind one player" or viewing all four hands as the game progresses. But more than this, the kibitzer's greatest joy seems to come from discussing the deal as it's being played. This is permissible and can be seen in the top section of the computer screen, where anyone can dash off a comment on his keyboard and it will be viewed instantly by the other 500 kibitzers may contact Granovetter by email around the world.

The Goldway matches are monthly events sponsored by the OKBridge Internet club and Bridge Today magazine. Once a month, Bobby Goldman of Texas and Paul Soloway of Seattle play against challengers. Last week's match was against Richard Pavlicek of F1. Lauderdale, Florida, and his son Richard Jr. The players actually played the match from three separate cities on four computers. Anyone in the world connected to a computer, modern, and local network to the Internet may become a member of OKBridge and become a talking kibitzer.

The most exciting deal of the night (or day, depending upon where you were watching from — the match began at 9:30 p.m. New York time, 4:30 a.m.

A move that takes the cake

By NIGEL SHORT

The most splendid chess confection I have seen was a cake produced in honor of the English team during the 1982 Luzem Olympiad. This work of art featured the final position of a John Nunn brilliancy, if my memory serves me correctly, and was proudly wheeled into the dining room by its creator, the chef and the hotel manager, so all could admire its beauty. Shortly afterward, I wandered over for a closer examination of the culinary delight. It shames me to recall but, in a moment of total absentmindedness, I picked up one of the marzipan pawns and ate it, en passant, so to speak. Alas, it was not long before my gross felony was discovered and I had to be hidden by the team from the irate manager. Vassily Ivanchuk once said getting married is like taking the b2 pawn in the Sicilian Defense: risky at best and arguably very unwise. Perhaps the same should also be said for the following "Poisoned Pawn" variation of the French Defense, here won by Georgy Timoshenko, the famous Irish grandmaster.

Daniel Barenboim conducts the incomparable Bayreuth Festival Orchestra in Wagner's Siegfried, the third part of Der Ring des Nibehingen, Wagner's mommental 16-hour epic that depicts the struggle to create a new, pure world. In Harry Kupfer's visually striking production (sets by Hans Schavemoch), the cast features exceptional heldentenor Siegfried Jerusalem as the naive simpleton who learns the meaning of love and has yet to learn what fear is all

Daniel Barenboim conducts Wagner's 'Siegfried' on Channel 8 (Bayreather Festspiele) about. John Tomlinson is the powerful Wanderer, the ruler of the world who witnesses his domain withering into thin air: the dramatic Graham Clark is the mischievous dwarf, Minne; and Anne Evans is Brunnhilde, whom Siegfried swakens from her decades-long sleep. First-rate Wagner from thefestival created by the composer himself. Tomorrow on Michael Ajzenstadt Channel 8 at 5:05 p.m.

FILM ADINA HOFFMAN

*** THAT OLD FEELING -- In this enjoy ably retrograde romantic comedy, Bette Midler and Dennis Farina play a divorced couple who claim to despise one another but who turn out still to be deeply in love. After 14 years of marriage to other, less com-patible partners, they are reunited at their daughter's wedding and they can't keep their hands off each other. first they wrestle and then they embrace. Written (by Leslie Dixon) expressly for Midler, the movie gives its star ample opportunity to ham and stay in character, and though her performance is basically a long, belted one-note, it's quite winning. Director Carl Reiner's technique is deliberately oldfashioned, but it isn't stuffy. If anything, his skewed affection for the misbehaving characters harks back to the sophisticatedly amoral fables of Lubitsch and Mankiewicz, with a bit of '60s sitcom thrown in. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Parental guidance suggested.)

"We see no reason to change our plans," said Uzi Rubin, head of the anti-missile defense project, called Homa (wall). "The partial deployment will be at the end of 1998 or early 1999 and we hope to stand hy this schedule," he said.

Rubin and other officials involved in the Arrow project vesterday held an unusual newa conference at the Defense Ministry to discuss last week's failed launch, io which the Arrow 2 missile went out of control seconds after it was fired toward a target missile. The Arrow 2, lauoched in the Mediterranean, was destroyed in mid-flight to prevent it from veering toward populatioo cen-

The Arrow 2 was to bave undergone six test launches, according to the joint US-Israel program. Officials said the partial emergeocy deployment of the system was to have begun after the sixth and final test, scheduled for early next year.

Uzi Eilam, head of the Defense Mioistry's research and development unit, said Arrow program engineers would cor-rect the malfunction before the next test. "We have enough time to cooduct research, enough time time to perform simulation," he said. Privately, the cogineers said they hope to combine the goals of two tests into the next launch launch.

"We hope we don't have to go back to the drawing board," said Yair Ramati, Arrow program engineer for Israel Aircraft Industries, the $1.6 billion project's chief contractor.

We will have a system that can deter," Eilam said. "When we talk of partial capability, we are talking about the capability of destroying another missile. The number of miasiles that we bave will grow over time."

Officials said that, despite the subject being raiaed during Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu'a tour of the Far East, the Arrow program is not seeking additiooal partners. Both Japan and South Korea have expressed interest io acquiring anti-missile defense

"If we bave other countries enter Arrow, it will be with the full coordination of the US," Eilam said. "Everything we do will be dooe together."

IDF: Intelligence failed in Military Prison 6 riot

Complaints of abuse unsubstantiated

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN

The ioternal IDF inquiry into the riot and takeover of Military Prison No. 6 carlier this month put much of the blame on the on intelligence officer for

Chief of General Staff Lt. Gcn. Amnon Lipkin-Shabak received the report on Sunday and has yet reacted to it, saying he is not done studyiog it. One of the decisioos facing Shahak is whether he will remove prison warden Lt.-Col. Yitzhak Ben-Ami, Assacl's inquiry did not deal with the oucstion whether the agreement reached with the prisoners which led to a bloodless end to the ordeal was valid. The IDF and state prosceutors are still debating whether the agreement was valid. There are those in the IDF, such as OC Manpower Maj.-Gen. Gidcon Sheffer, who have reportedly pressed the IDF Judge Advocate-General not to hopor the agreement, sioce it was drawn up under duress. Yisrael Ba'aliya whip MK Roman Bronfman warned yeslerday that spirits are still tense in the prison and that another rebellion could erupt. "The atmosphere is better than before, but tension still hovers to the air. If the agreement is not hooored, there is no guarantee that a oew revolt won't break out," Bronfman said following 2 visit to the prison at Atlit. He met with the 13 leaders of the rebellion and then later reported of his meeting with their parents.

not detecting signs of the riot sooner, but dismissed claims by prisoners that they were beaten or badly fed.

Speaking to reporters in Tel Aviv, Brig.-Gen, Avraham Assael, former OC Education Corps, who led the investigation, said the IDF has to decide now whether to remove the warden. Assael's investigation did not substantiate prisopers' claims that they were beaten and found their complaiots about food were not justified.

"The revolt was planned beforehand and we also see, because it was planned ahead of time, the importance of intelligence in prisons," Assael said, noting some of the prisooers knew of the mutiny plan a week to 10 days prior to the August 11 rebellion.

The report also questioned the role of the military prisons, saying the IDF lacks a clear concept. One of its recommendations is to transfer prisoners jailed for felonies to civilian jails, in order to separate them from soldiers serving time for disciplinary offenses.

Oren Shahor joins Labor Party

By SARAH HONIG

Oren Shahor, the former coordinator of government activities in the territories, is to formally join the Labor Party today, and plans to announce this at a press conference with party chairman Ehud Barak at noon.

Sbahor, a reserve major-general, had also headed the talks on civilian matters with the Palestinian Authority. He left military service several months ago under a cloud, after he was photographed leaving the home of then-Labor leader Shimon Peres late at night. He was accused of reporting to Peres on the negotiations with the PA. His appearance with Barak today is seeo as an opportunity for the party chairman to divert attention from the embarrassing episode in which he summarily fired half the 70 party headquarters employees only to end up retracting their dismissals, Shahor and Barak will devote their press conference to problems of defense and foreigo pol-

But Barak may be remioded of his internal party troubles at a Labor Knesset faction meeting, also scheduled for today, in which the party's financial woes will be discussed, as will Barak's sacking of the party employees as a way to cut costs. During the last faction session. Barak was attacked by all Labor MKs for the dismissals. However, he is expected to fare better today, since a cooling-off period is in force with the employees and since the MKs fear that the stinging barbs aimed at Barak may eventually do irreparable electoral damage.

The Labor Party employees. meanwhile, conferred yesterday for the first time since they ended their barricade at party headquarters earlier this week. Most participants criticized their staff committee representatives for having welcomed Barak back into his office with hugs and kisses, even though the dispute has not yet been resolved.
